This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

17477
31.215

Knowles - True unto Death - 1889.

17477.31.215

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

NO PLAYS EXCHANGED.

BAKER'S EDITION OF PLAYS

TRUE UNTO DEATH

WALTER H. BAKER & CO.
BOSTON

COPYRIGHT, 1899, BY WALTER H. BAKER & Co.

BAKER'S DARKEY PLAYS

Edited and arranged for publication from the well-known repertoire of "SCHOOLCRAFT AND COES" with all their original "gags" and "stage business."

BY GEO. H. COES.

Price . . . . . 15 cents each.

"Lake Schoolcraft" and "George Coes" are too well known to admirers of Negro Minstrelsy to require comment, and the following selections from their admirable repertory of pieces have no need of other recommendation. No one who has seen these artists in any of the following list of sketches needs assurances of their humor and good acting quality. Twelve are now ready, and others will follow as the demand arises.

Mrs. Didymus' Party. In One Scene. Two male characters. Scene, a plain room. An immensely humorous trifle. Plays twenty minutes.

Music vs. Elocution. In One Scene. Two male characters. Scene, a plain room. Always very popular. Plays fifteen minutes.

Mistaken Identity. In One Scene. Eight male and one female characters. Can be played in "white face" if desired. Plays fifteen minutes.

Oh, Well, It's No Use. In One Scene. Three male characters. A very funny sketch, full of genuine darkey humor. Plays twenty minutes.

Here She Goes, and There She Goes. In One Act. Eight male and one female characters. An uproariously funny piece of great popularity. Plays twenty-five minutes.

A Finished Education. A Finale for the "First Part" of a Minstrel Entertainment. Three speaking characters. No change of scene

Black Blunders. In Two Scenes. Nine males and three females. Scenery simple; costumes eccentric. Very lively and amusing. Plays twenty-five minutes.

The Old Parson. A "First Part Finish" for a Minstrel Entertainment. Six speaking characters. No change of scene.

Sublime and Ridiculous. In One Scene. Three male characters. Scenery and costumes very simple. A sure hit for a good burlesque comedian. Plays twenty minutes.

Everyday Occurrences. A "First Part Finish" for a Minstrel Entertainment. Three speaking characters. No change of scene.

Badly Sold. In Two Scenes. Four male characters and supers. A very funny piece. Can be played "white face" with equally good effect. Plays twenty minutes.

Our Colored Conductors. In Two Scenes. Three male characters and ten supers. This is an uproariously funny "skit" and a sure hit. Plays twenty minutes.

Catalogues describing the above and other popular entertainments sent free on application to

WALTER H. BAKER & CO.,

THEATRICAL PUBLISHERS,

No. 23 Winter Street - BOSTON, MASS.

TRUE UNTO DEATH.

A DRAMA

IN TWO ACTS.

BY

J. SHERIDAN KNOWLES.

BOSTON:

Walker, H. Baker & Co.

17477.31.215
Harvard College Library
F. L. Chase
20 Dec. 1918

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

London, 1866.

IVAN, A Russian Nobleman,	Mr. Price.
FREDERICK, his Friend,	Mr. Collett.
ROBERT, Landlord of the Forest Inn,	Mr. Fletcher.
DARAN, An Outlaw,	Mr. Parselle.
ORLOFF and KARL (Members of his Gang)	Mr. Turner and Mr. Thorne.
ALEXINA, A Young Serf,	Miss Ada Swanborough.
Catherine, Wife to Robert,	Miss Maria Simpson.

The action passes at Ivan's villa in the Suburbs of Moscow, and in the adjacent Forest.

TRUE UNTO DEATH.

ACT I.

Scene I. — Front scene representing a room in Ivan's villa, in the suburbs of Moscow.

Enter Ivan, in travelling costume, and Frederick, R.H.

Fred. So Ivan flies the Court, resolved to roam!
What makes him go?
Ivan. A vacant heart!
Fred. Whose heart
Is full and Ivan's vacant? Rank is his,
And wealth to wait upon it! Youth, with form
And face to use it; heart, with wit to guide it;
And spirit, spite of lets, to bear him through!
Then, with the sex we love, who rivals Ivan?
Might women's tongues talk freely as their eyes,
No maid was e'er beset as Ivan were!
In self-defence he must have ta'en a wife!
Ivan. In self-defence who strives against himself?
Took Ivan wife, then were there end to Ivan!
For who would have his happy spirit bound
When free to roam the earth, and, loving it,
In this or that fair region to abide?
So never saw I that fair woman yet
For love of whom my heart could say, "Rest here,
Be this thy world from hence!"
Fred. Would he be wrong
Who said of Ivan, he wrong'd woman, seeing,
Desir'd of all, he maketh suit to none?
Ivan. Say not desir'd of all, but loving all,
And yet ne'er wronging one — unlike his friend!
You love, and woo, and win, and cease to love.
So should I cease; and therefore never woo.
Fred. You love all women? You have never loved!
Ivan. Have never loved? From youthhood until now,
I dare the recreant hour would take thy part
To say it saw me not as deep in love
As ever Damon, over head and ears

Whelm'd in the magic and impetuous flood!
Deny me constant servitor to love,
And I will count you score of ruby lips
My blushing vouchers!

Fred. Very fit they blush,
Being false witnesses! One honest pair
Were worth them all. Love never went beyond,
At one and the same time — nor that time brief.
I never was in love! A miracle
To ordinary flesh and blood it is,
How heart can cleave to heart tenaciously,
Nor in the wide world find attraction else;
Yea, 'gainst persuasion of the senses even,
Known matchmakers in love! An uncouth mien,
Fray'd skin, coarse features, harsh attuned tongue,
Gain the love-warded heart, impregnable
From other source to siege of eye or ear.

Ivan. You talk of woman's love? Men love not so —
So love not you! And yet have I a thought
That love asks more than meets the eye and ear
In melody and beauty: So the lack
Of that's the secret of my discontent.
I have banqueted to surfeit upon smiles,
Where'er I turn that meet me! A blank cheek
For rarity were feasting!

Fred. Such a one
I could have shown you a brief month ago,
And one as fair as blank! A serf of mine,
Whom I had watch'd from budding womanhood
Unto the full unfolding of the flower,
With aim, on my own terms, to make her mine.
Thou shouldst have seen the lord entreat his serf —
The indignant serf repulse her lord — and make him
Forbear for very shame.

Ivan. And yet thy serf?
Resolve this riddle.

Fred. Mark. Designing her
For my especial pleasures, early care,
By my wise forethought, had its training hand
Applied to her fresh mind — a richer soil
Than my anticipations counted on;
But by her heart surpassed, which greedily
Did of the culture of the other most Untoward, unexpected profit make!
I saw her not from girlhood till the lapse
Of ripening years had partly done their work.
I then beheld, and wonder'd — woo'd — was spurned!
Beyond enduring piqued, I told my will,
And warn'd her, next we met, to know her lord!

Ivan. And did she?

Fred. No; forthwith she fled, without

The privacy of kin or friend, nor left
Trace that could guide pursuit.

Ivan. Give me that serf?
Suppose I find her! That most worthy serf,
Least worthy such to be!

Fred. Thou'dst hope to thrive?

Ivan. No! I would act more nobly. Heaven! if with props
Of wealth and rank — pure lineage — lofty kin —
Women of quality who keep fair names
Command our reverence, what should we pay
To her, who, base in stock, is virtuous?
I'll buy thy serf from thee at any cost!

Fred. Talk not of buying. Find her, she is thine!

Ivan. Nay! it must be a valid bargain though:
We'll seal and sign, whereto you must accept
Consideration in exchange for her.

Fred. Whate'er you will.

Ivan. It shall be worth your while;
Yourself shall name it to your full content.
We'll in and write, and have our witnesses.
(Aside.) At any cost to own this noble serf
Is paying cheaply for her.

Fred. I believe
I told you she was fair?

Ivan. Let her be so:
Her face and form are least of woman's dow'r.

Exeunt, L.

SCENE II. — Set, representing a rude hostlery, seven or eight versts from Moscow.—L.U.E., practicable stairway leading to bedroom; practicable door, C. in flat; R., a window; a log fire is burning; settees, chairs and table, guns; kitchen utensils, etc., are hung on the walls, a spinning wheel, R.2E.

Sounds of quarrelling heard off between CATHERINE and ROBERT. They enter hastily at back, ROBERT first, and come down front.

Cath. Why, Robert, rate you me? What if she saw
The baggage of the traveller? No fear
He'll ever come to claim it. Heed it not.

Rob. 'Twas oversight to have it there; might cost
More than an angry word, perchance a life!
What said she when she saw it,— when you told her
The traveller was gone? What said she, wife?

Cath. Whate'er she might have said, did not thy wife
With ready wit forestall? Be sure she did!
Invoked St. Anthony, St. Nicholas,
St. Ursuline, St. Bridget, and St. Ruth,
And all their comrades i' the calendar,
And clapp'd my hands and wrung them; made pretence

To run to the door as if to sally forth,
And then ran back again; ope'd and shut down
The window in the selfsame moment; 'gan
As I would tell her errand she should go,
And stopp'd in the middle on't — then clapp'd and wrung
My hands, and call'd on all the saints again,

Rob. And made she no remark?

Cath. She had, perhaps,
But that I found her occupation — sent her,
In case of further oversight, to search
His chamber — call'd her back again ere well
She had sped half way — propounded other orders,
And in the next breath countermanded them.
Then fell to fault-finding with the whole male
Creation — no such thing as bearing with them
How but for wives and mothers and the like
They would be worse than good for nothing. Leave
His baggage and set off no one knows whither.
And waiter, hostler, landlord standing by,
And let him do it!

Rob. (Laughing.) Came I in for my share?

Cath. Be sure you did. Had you been by, good husband,
You had come in for more.

Rob. I'm quite content.
Then has she no suspicion?

Cath. None.

Rob. 'Tis well.
And had you thought to lead her mind astray
As to the care the honest host would take
Of the forgetful traveller's property?

Cath. I did. Complained of lumber here and there;
How one's own property was care enough
Without the charge of other people's. How Trouble unask'd for must make up its mind
To go without reward. How, in this world,
Tho' roguery still drives the briskest trade,
Still honest people must discharge their duty —
Take no account of cost, or care, or pains,
But for requital trust to Providence!

Rob. This girl has brought us luck. Since she came here
'Tis bare a month, and lo! a prize already.
She has brought us luck, will bring us more; her looks
Are credit to our house.

Enter ALEXINA, unperceived, at top of stair; she listens.

Cath. (Pouting.) Has no one else
Good looks?

Rob. (Fondling her.) Art jealous? If thy maid be fair,

Art thou less so? Thou'rt for the host, good wife,
She for the guest. Thou know'st I love thee well,
And from thy smiles (thou never didst grant more)
Make grudgingly my bait to fish for gold,
When the rich traveller that visit pays
We wish him to delay, yet not repeat.
Though not thy match, this girl thy place supplies,
And needing shelter, scarce will be in haste
To quit the roof that yields it to her. Meantime
Our gains count double, but our cares keep pace.
The help she brings us brings with it strange eyes,
The which behoves we watch for danger, wife.
On thy account alone I shrink from it.
I heed not for myself, or what my death,
Or when the time! (Starts.) Hark! was that not a cry
Borne from the forest? (A faint halloa is heard off.)

Cath. Ay, methinks I catch
The winding of a bugle.

Rob. Then is Karl
But good as his word. Bestir! the quarry's nigh!

(ROBERT runs off at back. CATHERINE looks hastily around the room and exits R., ALEXINA concealing herself the while.)

Enter ALEXINA down stairway, agitated. She comes front.

Alex. My fears are true! This is a house of blood!
'Twas all pretence! No traveller did depart
Ere break of day, or wherefore was not I
Forewarned to rise, as fits my place! I heard
The sound of footsteps stealing 'long the floor
At dead of night; of doors that ope'd and shut;
Of people whispering like those who do
An evil thing in dread; in caution one,
In haste another, in alarm a third;
Now speaking one by one, now all at once,
Now death-like still, as tho' they held their breath;
Together moving as they pass'd my door,
As if some burthen they would safe bestow,
And vanishing alike. I am sure a house
Of blood! The cup she gave to me was drugged!
The taste repell'd my palate! I contriv'd
Without detection to dispose of it.
Thus, what was meant for sleep warn'd wakefulness.
I rose too much betimes this morning, so
Disturb'd them unawares, the spoil unhid.
Whate'er betide, I quit this fearful roof—
Whither, alas, to go. No matter whither!
If here I bide, with murder I consort!
Yet should I wrong them? Innocence has paid
For worse appearances! They come! I'll prove them!

Enter ROBERT at back, and CATHERINE, R. They start on seeing ALEXINA.

Rob. (Aside to CATH.) I see no sign of traveller.
Cath. Bide your time;
Take care that she suspects not. Why rose the girl
So soon this morning?
Rob. Better question her!
(They come down, one on each side of ALEXINA.)
Cath. What! girl, with idle hands? Yet still she is
A hopeful waiting maid! — was up 'ere dawn,
Tho' free to lie till sunrise!
Rob. By her eyes,
Of sleep no surfeit has she had. They are red,
And heavy.
Alex. Horrid dreams disturb'd my sleep.
(ROBERT and CATHERINE exchange uneasy glances.)
Cath. What didst thou dream?
Rob. Come, maiden, tell thy dream!
Alex. I dreamt last night a dream of terror wild.
Methought a weary traveller lay asleep.
I heard the midnight murderer's cautious step,
As, with his weapon bared to smite his prey,
He glided onwards to the victim's bed!
I strove to call for help — but all in vain.
My tongue was tied, my voice could frame no cry
Even when the gleaming knife was rais'd to strike ——
Rob. (Terrified.) 'Fore Heaven I swear ——
Cath. (Trembling.) And I — thou canst not say ——
Alex. Nay, landlord! hostess! why so ill at ease?
'Twas but the ghostly tissue of a dream.
(Aside.) I need no further proof.
Rob. (Wiping his brow.) Save up your dreams,—
If you must dream, — for others than for me.
My tender heart is such that at these tales
It leaps into my mouth; it bides there now.
Cath. I have no patience with thee, girl! About
And set the evening meal. (Aside to ROB.) Don't be a fool!
(ALEX. busies herself setting table. Knocking at the door.)
Rob. A summons. (Looks out.) As I live it is our prize!
Cath. (Running back to him.) Husband! You're off your guard.
Rob. (Aside to CATH.) She pays no heed.
Did she suspect, she ne'er had told a dream
Like that to you and me. Observe the girl —
She dreams by day! — she never heard the knock!
Come, wife; 'twere best we let him in ourselves.
(Exeunt at back.)
Alex. (Suddenly abandoning her listless manner.)
Had I o'erlooked the while they did the deed,

Not more were I assured the deed were done!
Whom have we now! Pray Heaven no wealthy guest,
To tempt their foul, remorseless hands again!
(She goes to the window and looks out; becomes much agitated.)
Oh, woful sight! Oh, woe, when youth and grace,
With fortune's favor to emblazon them,
That ought to move our smiles, provoke our tears!
A noble guest indeed! for such he looks,
His glorious presence flouting his attire,
Which yet shone gloriously. No retinue?
None but his driver? (Returns down stage.) Ha! the same that brought
The guest of yesternight. They are in league.
The carriage broken down, — and for a shift,
Repair'd with cords. So fell it out before.
Heavens! how they gave him hail, and smil'd him in,
As welcome had no end. (Goes back to window.)
Don't enter here!
Better the charnel-house, and there the dead
To wait on thee, than this, the habitation
Of flesh and blood. Its tenants would look grim;
But here are those who welcome with grim deeds.
(Retires from window.) I'll warn him of his danger when alone. (Exit L.)

Enter IVAN at back, in travelling costume, followed by ROBERT, bearing cloak and valise.

Rob. Broke down, my lord, you say?
Ivan. Why, as you see,
An utter wreck, — but so far fortunate
In that we are not cast on desert land.
Rob. Such accidents will happen, for our roads
Are roads by courtesy, nought else. Still, my lord,
I needs must hope that wine we make ourselves,
And viands furnished from yon waving wood,
And fagots blazing on a kindly hearth,
For your mishap shall make some slight amends.
Ivan. Good! let but the venison and wine
Match with your fagots, and I am content.
Rob. You shall not have to wait. (Bustles about.) Where art thou, wife?
Ho! Alexina! Alexina! What,
The silly wench is not a-dreaming still?
I will return anon.
(Goes out behind. IVAN sits reflectively by the fire.)
Ivan. Good! I can wait.
Who can she be? For what mine eyes have seen
My wonder questions as beyond belief;

A second glance accus'd the first as blind,
Not cognizant of half it looked upon.
That, from its follower in turn received
Like measure of rebuke. (Rises and looks about, then off, L.) She comes! Entrancement
Lives in her very step. What now I feel
I never felt before, nor dreamed to feel.

Enter ALEXINA, bearing a flagon.

Ivan. (Taking flagon.) It is not meet these gentle hands should bear
A burthen, howsoever light for me,
Nor that thou shouldst thus lowly to me minister.
Alex. O sir! (She looks about timidly.)
Ivan. But blessed were the lot to me
To tend thee, and fulfil thy every wish,
Preventing fancy with the ken of love.
Oh, for a life of such obedience —
Alex. (Still troubled.) Sir?
Ivan. To do thy will forever.
Alex. Ah!
Ivan. Till now
I was a stranger to the fascination
Which, out of thousand women, one alone
Endows with power to bless us. I had sought it,
But at the end no nearer to it proved
Than at the setting out. I deemed it nought,
And lo! when I had given it up 'tis here.
Alex. Oh, mock me not. Seek not with idle words
To tempt a simple maiden, — though her heart
Beats fast on thy account.
Ivan. What dost thou say?
Alex. Mistake me not. 'Tis not in wanton riot
My blood runs wildly; not for love
My pulses quicken; but I could not bear
To see thy young life ended —
Ivan. How? my life!
Alex. Yes. O sir, 'tis in fearful jeopardy!
Thou'rt in the den of murder, where to 'scape
Fate worse than death have I unwittingly
Till yesternight sojourned; to-night, unless Heav'n succors thee, thou diest.
Ivan. (Walks to and fro, in thought.) Could I send Tidings to the next post?
Alex. There's none to bear them.
Ivan. Some passing travellers may bring me aid?
Alex. Alas, not this way lies the public track.
Who travel hither see no journey's end

Save that of life, — a dread, untimely one.
Ivan. What's to be done?
Alex. (Passionately.) But if you die, I'll die
Along with you. (Recollecting herself.) What have I said?
Ivan. Enough
To make me wish to live, as ne'er I wished. (Pause.)
Is she who seems to order in the house, —
That buxom dame, well framed, with blazing eye, —
The mistress on't?
Alex. She is.
Ivan. The landlord's wife?
Alex. His wife.
Ivan. I 'gin to catch a glimpse of hope.
Alex. No hope from her, — their hearts and thoughts are one.
Affinity of nature here supplies
The lack of those sweet wellings of the heart
That nourish love in others — ruth to man,
Homage to heaven; and binds these each to each,
With such adhesion as might cast reproach
On that of holier friends.
Ivan. He loves her then?
Alex. Much, very much.
Ivan. A hope! I mark'd his eye
Twice when she pass'd him. Where she moved, they went,
As in her lay the mastery which ruled
The spirits that informed them — servitors
They seemed to me, as of a royal mistress;
All bright with beaming beauty in her presence,
All blank when she was gone!
Alex. He fondly loves her.
Ivan. Then is the fondness of my hope the less!
I leave the house in safety.
Alex. When?
Ivan. (Smiling.) To-morrow,
Guarded by friends!
Alex. Where are they?
Ivan. I shall find them.
Thou wouldst not stay behind me, wouldst thou?
Alex. No!
I would not stay!
Ivan. And wouldst thou go with me?
Alex. (Diffidently.) I fain would go.
Ivan. Yet not with me?
Alex. With him
Who pledged his honor for a maiden's safety!
Ivan. The pledge you need I give.
Alex. I'll go with thee
When and where'er thou goest. (They shake hands.)

Ivan. Now be brave;
Whate'er I say or do, let naught surprise thee.
Hold fear an alien to thee. With the help,
Yea, of the self-same hands that plot my death,
Will I contrive my safety. Hark! a step!
Alex. The landlord comes! To 'scape suspicion, bear
That for the time I flout thee, and thy wit
Freely exert in answer to my chafing
(ALEXINA pretends to elude the grasp of IVAN, as ROBERT and CATHERINE enter at back, carrying fruits, etc.)
Ivan. What! not a kiss? methinks you're overcoy.
Alex. To say you love me! Only catch me trust
A gay court gentleman.
Rob. (Aside to CATH.) The bait has taken,
He's in the net! (Aloud.) Heed not the saucy jade.
The truth to tell, from morn till night she dreams
Of lovers.
Cath. Come, girl, ease me of my load;
Then set the upper room in order meet
For such a guest.
Ivan. (Seating himself.) I cry your pardon, dame,
No upper room for me. A traveller
Should keep no state if he would see the world.
Men make a face to rank, I would see nature's.
Therefore the common household room for me.
(ALEXINA lights candles and arranges supper, then retires behind and watches IVAN. CATHERINE spins, and ROBERT waits on his guest.)
Who churishly would wish to be alone?
(Makes a gesture of admiration towards ALEXINA.)
Beauty wants tendance of admiring eyes,
And she shall have it, far as mine can pay
The envious servitude.
Rob. Your will is law.
Ivan. Host, of your maid you are free — who woos her may;
But if I judge your watchful eye aright,
Who tries his chance against your lady's smile,
Would need to stake his life.
Rob. Nay, sir, she's free
To smile on whom she may.
Ivan. And you are right;
She were to pity else, and ne'er would smile,
Seeing she loves to smile on none but thee.
How long since you were married? Do you know
What marriage is? A thousand different things.
A gain, a loss — a partnership, a breach;
A song, a dirge — a peace, or furious war;
An airy chamber, or close prison cell;
A laughing dance, a frowning funeral!
How long is't since you married?

Rob. Come next week,
Six months.
Ivan. Six months, and yet the honeymoon!
Why, by the dalliance of your loving eyes,
Encountering one another clear and bright,
As with the freshness of a new crowned wish —
As bees from flowers bear honey to the hives;
I should have guessed six days, before six months.
Why, you are miracles of wedded love, —
Patterns, I will not say; for, if before
Was never seen the like, how may we hope
The like again to see? (Rises.) A boon I pray.
Rob. What is it, noble sir?
Ivan. (Leading CATHERINE down C., and standing between her and ROBERT.) Let me adopt you.
Rob. } O sir!
Cath. }
Ivan. I pray you do, as an example
To wedded pairs to come! I will not say
We'll make the married state a perfect thing;
But we may mend it. Suffer me to take
The trouble of your fortune off your hands.
Rob. }
Cath. } Nay, sir!
Ivan. 'Tis still the fate of modesty
To stand in its own light.
Rob. }
Cath. } You are too good.
Ivan. And if I am, be your deserts to blame
That make me so. I would have given the world
To have been at your wedding. But there's no loss
Which may not be made up with proper pains.
Some day may make amends for missing that.
Rob. Sure never landlord welcom'd guest so free.
Cath. Nor landlady. So kind, so humorous.
Rob. So generous!
Cath. Well favored too, withal.
Were I a maid, my fortune were soon told.
Ivan. The choice that is debarred is quickly made.
What were this moment done, could it be done,
Being to be done, will take an hour of thought,
Perhaps be then no forwarder in act!
Your handsome maid, good dame, has eyes as well.
Ask her to take me!
Alex. 'Tis not eyes that see.
It is the soul, to which they tender light;
So men the self-same thing see differently.
Ivan. (To Cath.) Your maid is apt of wit —
Cath. (Angrily.) More apt of tongue!
(A knock at the door.)
Cath. (Aside to ROBERT.) Who knocks?

Rob. (Aside to her). 'Tis Karl returned.
(Aloud.) Open the door!
(ALEXINA opens door. Enter KARL.)
Ivan. My pleasant charioteer!
Karl. An honest lad, sir.
Rob. (Aside to KARL, after checking him for speaking.)
Say, have you found our friends? and will they come?
Karl. (Aside.) I have; at midnight you may count upon them —
Rob. (Aside.) They will be here?
Karl. (Aside.) As sure as midnight comes.
Rob. (Aside.) That's sure enough.
Alex. (Aside to IVAN.) You mark!
Ivan. (Aside to her.) I do! Fear not,
I am prepared! (Turns to ROBERT.) You say by breakfast time
All will be ready? He can then proceed?
Rob. Ay, and before, sir.
Ivan. I have travell'd, host,
Yet never was at home at inn before.
Come hither, lad; why do you hang your head? (To KARL.)
Rob. The boy is bashful, sir.
Karl. I always blush
When a gentleman speaks to me.
Ivan. I dare be sworn
A lad as good as modest. Would you take
Service with me?
Karl. La, sir.
Ivan. I have a fancy
For a simple country lad; but ne'er till now
Found one to my liking. We shall talk to-morrow.
Oh! lucky overthrow that brought me hither!
Landlord, I like your house, I like your wife,
I like your maid, I like your modest boy,
And last, nor least of all, I like yourself.
You look so thorough-going honest. Hark you!
Wouldst bear the burthen of a trifling charge?
I like my quarters here so well, I mean
To take them up again, and shortly, too!
This box holds treasure (lifts valise), sorry silver, host.
A traveller of old, I had my fears
Coming this lonely road. I dreamt not, then,
To meet with friend like you. Luck doesn't come
At every hour or every turn of the road,
And, sooth, I am o'er-provided. Be my banker
Till I return — unless I make too bold.
Will you?
Karl. Yes; sure he will, sir.
Rob. (Thrusting KARL back.) Silence!

Ivan. Nay,
Blame not the kindly, honest, modest lad,
Who errs through forwardness to serve your friend.
And, landlord, are you well provided, here,
'Gainst customers who love free quarters, — come
And go, as list them, and ne'er call for bills?
For, next I tax your welcome, I intend
To travel with the bulk of that in gold.
Karl. The house is safe, sir.
Rob. (Thrusting him back again.) Silence, oaf, again!
Ivan. Nay, a good lad, indeed! a clever lad,
An honest lad, a modest lad, and kind, —
Too kind, perhaps, — his only failing, that.
Here, landlord, take my coin, — I pray you do, —
And hoard it surely under lock and key.
Karl. I'll answer for him, sir!
Rob. (Pushing him to the door.) To bed, you lout!
Nor yet o'ersleep yourself, but be astir
Betimes, to wait upon the gentleman.
(KARL exits at back.)
Alex. (Aside.) It draws near bedtime. If to means like these
He trusts for safety he but cheats himself.
Or aims he thus to throw them off their guard?
Ivan. Come, host; a flask and goblet! We must drink.
(ROBERT exits R.)
I trust you are not jealous, landlady,
That I prefer your spouse to guard my dross?
The host is still the pillar of the house;
For trust, no odds I'm sure, 'twixt him and you?
Cath. I take in kindness, sir, whate'er you give.
(Aside.) Now, would I let myself, it were not hard
To like so simple, free, and blythe a spark.

ROBERT re-enters with a flask and goblet.

Ivan. (Taking the bottle and examining it.) Ha! — this will do! — I feel the generous wine,
Before the cork is out. Draw it, host;
The goblet give to me. When these bright lips
Have pledg'd the wine, I'll teach you how to drink
The measure of a right good thirsty soul!
Alex. (Aside to IVAN, having watched the looks of ROBERT and CATHERINE, who betray some anxiety.) The wine is drugged.
Ivan. (Aside to her.) I'll prove if it be so —
(To ROBERT.) Host, the first cup is yours!
Rob. (Refusing.) By your favor, sir.
Ivan. Nay, no excuse but drink.
Cath. (Aside to ROBERT.) Pretend to drink!
(ROBERT barely puts cup to his lips, and removes it.)

Ivan. Sip with a toper host. Why, drink the draught:
Off with it, till no telltale drop be left
To trickle to the brim! I wait the cup.
Cath. (Aside to ROBERT.) Say that the flask is bad, — the rest are honest.
For a deep draught will drug to sleep as well,
And he's the spark to take one.
Ivan. (Aside to ALEXINA.) They're at fault.
Alex. (Aside to him.) He will not drink. I knew the wine was drugg'd.
Rob. What's this? (Pretends to dislike the wine and spits it out.)
Cath. Good wine? (Smells bottle.) A damaged flask?
How came we by it?
Ivan. (Smiling furtively.) Fetch another, host,
And leave this here. No man shall drink bad wine
In house of friend of mine, while I can help;
So, there go flask and all. — I'll pay the cost.
(Flings it into the fire.)
Rob. I'm very sorry, sir —
Ivan. I'm very glad.
Another sample of a better sort. (ROBERT goes out, R.)
I'll empty every flask till one shall fit
And fill your cellar, should I run it out.

Re-enter ROBERT with another bottle.

Now draw, and fill, and drink. That flask is good;
I test the draught by looking in your eye,
Bright spokesman of your palate! Fill again.
Hostess, the richest wine wants flavor which
The lip of women gives it!
Cath. (Drinking.) Health and fortune, sir!
Ivan. Health will suffice, — no fortune good as health.
Now, maiden, yours the cup; and after you (Passes it to ALEXINA,)
It comes to me; and so our lips may meet
Without offence, join'd by the blushing cup,
That saves your cheeks, but gives a glow to mine
Who know I meet the kiss you thought not of!
Health to thee, maiden, — body's health, — and health
Far richer of the heart. Such blessed ground
Should grow no wish or hope to mourn a blight.
(Drinks.)
Rob. Sooth, sir, I would not be an anchorite,
To pass an hour with you; it would go hard
But I should break my vows.
Ivan. (Affecting partial intoxication.) 'Tis time to sleep.
The hour, or else the cup, persuades me so.
Landlord, to bed!
Rob. (Taking up candles.) I'll show you to your room.

Ivan. I'faith, you shall not, hist! — I never yet
Took groom to light me thither. Tripping feet
Of maid, or housewife, do that office best.
I mean all honestly. What piping page
Could say "good-night," as this sweet maiden can,
Leaving a seraph's blessing in mine ear,
To wile me to my rest? Give her the lights.
Though, as a stranger's trust is just as far
As keeps him well in sight, your gentle dame
Shall e'en one candle bear, for company.

(Takes one of the lights from ALEXINA, to whom the landlord has given both, and presents it to CATHERINE.)

But if you will, go fetch a flask of wine,
Your richest, rarest, for a stirrup cup
Before I plunge into the land of dreams.
I go to bed in state. Lady, lead on.

(CATHERINE and ALEXINA ascend stairs, IVAN follows, but turns round and looks fixedly with a smile at ROBERT, who takes down the cellar keys, and stands perplexed below.—The scene shuts in).

SCENE III.— The Inn Yard (Front Cloth.) — Lights down.

Enter ROBERT, from house, bearing lantern. Enter KARL, L.— They meet.

Rob. You felt it too?
Karl. Yes! treasure by the weight.
Rob. Men travel not with iron or with lead;
He said that it was silver —
Karl. Thanks to me!
Not in all Russia is postilion found
Could so contrive a dexterous break-down,
That what was done of thought, seemed accident.
I knew my ground, and, at the point, my steed
With all my will, against my will, set off.
Now for my skill: to urge, yet seem to check,
To chide with thong, yet mean encouragement;
To give him hint he had my leave to go.
The bank was now in sight, — that friend in need, —
The which behoved me shun, concerned we meet.
And would I meet it? No! Though I should twist
The head off the carrion. How I strained
By thong and rein, by knee and spur, the wheel
Should clear the bank a mile! In the next moment
We charg'd it. Traveller, postilion, carriage,
And carrion, in a twink were overthrown.
Rob. (Giving money.) There for thy merits, — one, two, three, four, five,—
The sum I promised thee.

Karl. A goodly sum!
Yet would not pay the setting of a bone,
Chanced I to break one. Surgeon's charges bleed
Much better than their lancets.
Rob. Thou art free
From both; give thanks.
Karl. A goodly gift!
A man's neck is worth something, though I ran
The risk of breaking mine, — I am sure I did.
I would not be a traitor; no, not for all
The traveller's box contains. I am o' the spirit
That scorns a bribe. The traveller's a great man.
He is rich, — he will be missed, and search be made.
Rewards will be proclaimed for clue to him.
Who'll give it them? Will Karl? Give Karl the knout;
He would not give it them. But, then, has Karl
A conscience, and his conscience likes fair play!
"Come, Karl," it says to him, "tell the secret;
Thou'rt offered fifty ducats. What gottest thou
For keeping it? As much?" No, conscience. "Half?"
Nor yet the half, dear conscience. "Half of that?"
Nor that. "Ten ducats, certainly!" Take five
Away. "Five ducats only. Is that fair?"
There is a poser. But is Karl the lad
That's lightly left without a word to say?
Not he. So thus he answers conscience: "That
Is my affair. A bargain is a bargain.
Though 'twere the half of five, I am content;
Halve that again, again I am content;
Say 'twere one ducat only, and what then?
Money to scrubs. Karl is a lad of honor."
Rob. Thou got'st what thou didst ask. Say that to conscience.
Karl. So have I said to her a thousand times;
But conscience hath a very woman's tongue;
A miracle it is to silence her.
Though had I asked thee twice the sum, no word
Had she been left to say.
Rob. You're sure of that?
Karl. Sure? Certain, positive, convinc'd, content.
Nay! conscience after all will list to reason.
Rob. Yet yours methinks is but a stubborn one.
Karl. Very; will heed at times no will but's own;
When in the humor 'tis to run away,
Turn it to right or left, you have a horse
With the bit between his teeth.
Rob. Five ducats more
Would go, methinks, but very little way
To put thy conscience upon terms with thee?
Karl. Nay; a great way. Already she comes round
At but the thought.

Rob. Then the reality
Would reconcile her quite?
Karl. Quite? Perfectly.
Wholly, entirely, altogether, all.
Rob. (Giving more money.) There are five ducats, then; and one to boot,
And hark you, Karl! — If that should come to pass
Which thou surmisedst now, give timely note;
And I will pay for silence twice as much
As they for speech, to keep thy conscience quiet.
Karl. If honesty, as men say, oft goes bare
And sparely feeds, at other times it thrives;
And of such is the present. It is well.
Rob. And now away! The while I fetch the wine
Shall be our traveller's viaticum.
(KARL goes off R., ROB., L. Change.)

SCENE IV. — (Set) — A Bedchamber in the Inn. — Bed, table, chairs, etc. — Door in flat, etc.

Enter CATHERINE and ALEXINA, lighting IVAN.—Lights up.

Ivan. Set down the lights, but leave not yet the room;
I fain would yet enjoy your sight, fair maid,
And yours, sweet hostess, 'ere I fall to sleep.
Cath. It draws near midnight. (Makes as if to go.)
Ivan. (Restraining her.) Nay, you shall remain.
Cath. (Aside.) Pity, he is so frank and generous.
Ivan. Hostess, I pray be seated. (Offers chair.)
Cath. Nay, good sir.
Ivan. I pray you do. You are not in the room,
Unless you sit. The while you stand, you go.
(Landlady sits R.U.E.—IVAN converses with her.—ALEXINA comes C.)
Alex. (Aside.) What can he purpose? Playfulness is slight
To cope with fate so dread as threatens him.
His smiles are terror to me, — make me feel
As watching one at gambols on a cliff.
And yet whene'er his eye encounters mine
Its steady glance wakes confidence again.
Ivan. (Opening a traveller's desk.) Hostess, a traveller at times may be
A lonely man; when he lacks company,
He finds it here. (Prepares to write.) Your pardon, while I write;
A friend at the next station looks for me,
And I would send him word of my mischance
By line, the which, I doubt not, my good host
Will, long ere morning, bear. (Writes.)
Cath. (Aside.) And if he should —
I scarcely should regret; but small the hope.

Alex. (Aside.) And trusts he for his rescue but to that.
Oh, woe is me! if that's his only help
I tremble for him. Yet how calm he looks!
What cheer of heart in all he says and does!
Fate cannot look at him, and be his foe.
His face might turn hostility to love.

Ivan. (Folding and directing a paper.) Thus may a traveller find company,
By calling round him his own ready thoughts
To talk with him, and make the hour pass lightly.
But travellers may want friends, and friends are things
That are not found as soon as company;
That deal in acts, not words — or words that turn
Upon the word to acts. Though, take my word,
The tongueless friend's not farthest from the best.
Here is a brace of such.

(Opens a drawer in the desk, and takes out a brace of pistols. CATHERINE draws back.)
Nay! start not, hostess,
I never trifle with a friend in need,
To ask his help, 'ere 'tis required in earnest.
But keep your seat! 'Tis all the boon I ask, —
No weapon that I wield bears harm for you.
You fear not, gentle maid? (To ALEXINA.)

Alex. Not for myself.

Ivan. Not fearing that, all other fear put by.
Ha! landlord!

ROBERT enters at back with flask, etc.

Rob. Here, sir!

Ivan. (Presenting pistol. — Hostess starts up.) Your seat resume. (Hostess sits again.)

Rob. What mean you?

Ivan. If you will, a jest, a quip,
The drowsy night to cheat of half its pow'r,
And make our new aquaintance closer still.
(ROBERT advances.)
No nearer, host. (Presenting.) By Heav'n, fall back again. (ROBERT retires.)
Yet further. (ROBERT retires again.) Now you know your proper place;
See that you keep it.

Alex. (Aside.) Such command he looks
As neither stop nor question deigns consult:
And still I tremble.

Ivan. (To ALEXINA.) Gentle maiden, raise
The flask and flagon with thy graceful hand;
Your touch the draught will richer make, and give
A wealth its vintage never could bestow.
Now fill the cup, and dare the beaded tide

To kiss a lip, so sweet and full as thine!
And wish me, lady, as your knight forlorn,
Good-night and pleasant dreams. (Laughing.)
Heav'n save the mark!

Alex. (Filling the cup and kissing it.) I wish thee safe good-night and bright good-morn!

Ivan. Whom best you love — why, pass the cup to him!
(ALEXINA hesitates — presents the cup to IVAN.)
I taste your lip, and not the brimming tide. (Drinks.)
The hostess! (ALEXINA gives CATHERINE the cup. She merely touches it with her lips, and returns it angrily.)
Now the host! — but no! a moment stay —
To slight my hostess' lip were somewhat bold.
Health, and good-night, my host? (Drinks.) Good host, good-night!

Rob. I mean my wife to come. (Makes as if for his wife.)

Ivan. (Threatening CATHERINE with pistol.) Mean what you please;
But, with your leave, as doubtless you've the right,
I mean both maid and wife to stay.

Rob. (Moving.) S'death, sir!

Ivan. (Presenting.) Beware, sir! — Mark me well, good landlord mine,
I know my fate, and will not bleed for thee!
Your wife, as hostage, here shall I detain,
Your maid her guard, so jealous love may sleep.
(Takes letter from table.)
This missive craves a speedy escort; see
'Tis here by dawn! — and then your neck is safe,
Your wife released — your villain secret kept;
But, at a sign that warrants slightest fear, —
A finger on the latch, the faintest sound
Without the door, — you seal her instant death!
And though one arm 'gainst hundreds I oppose,
Nor she nor I shall fall alone! Say, then,
You catch my meaning, host?

Rob. (Gloomily.) I do. Good-night. (Going.)

Cath. Good-night. We go with you? (To ROBERT.)

Ivan. (Threatening with pistols.) Landlord, beware!

Rob. (Motioning CATHERINE to stay.) His highness wills you bear him company;
An honor'd guest, you know, should have his way;
Mayhap he's troubled with the megrims; sprites,
Spectres, hobgoblins, come o' nights, you see,
Whenever the hired beds of stranger-folks
He presses; so to sleep he dreads to pass;
And therefore asks, sans ceremony, wife,
To have you within call.

Cath. (Violently.) I shall not stay.

Alex. Nay, mistress, why? No ill he means us.

Rob. (To CATH.) Stay.

Ivan. She must indeed.
Cath. I'd know the reason.
Ivan. Know
The reason! O woman, thou know'st it well!
Cath. (After a pause.) I'll stay.
Ivan. 'Tis well. Good-night, my host. (To ROBERT.)
Rob. I go —
Spare us! your pleasure shall be done by dawn.
(ROBERT goes to door and turns a lingering look on his wife. IVAN still holds his pistol pointed. ALEXINA silently thanks Heaven for the interposition.)

END OF FIRST ACT.

ACT II.

SCENE I. — A Room in Ivan's Villa (Front Cloth).

Enter IVAN and FREDERICK, L.

Ivan. Well, Frederick, any word of her?
Fred. Not yet.
Suburbs and city have we searched in vain;
But why this yearning wish to find the maid?
Thou know'st thou wouldst abhor to do her wrong
Why wish her back again?
Ivan. To right myself
In her esteem. Gain pardon for a wrong
I did her; and, as far as in me lies,
Requiting her for life preserved to me,
Her life preserve against mishaps, assaults;
Then with an honest blessing bid her go,
And ne'er behold her more.
Fred. (Laughing.) If as thou think'st
She loves thee!
Ivan. If? Good Frederick! list to that
I would not tell before. When, as required,
My escort came, and straight I rose to go,
Her face, till then all flush'd with watching, turn'd
The hue to match a shroud; and so remain'd,
Until, as from a death-trance waking her
With summons to my side, my voice dissolv'd
The spell, and made her move, a form of life
With new infusion glowing. Once to mine
Her eye she lifted. 'Twas one only look;
But with that look she gave me all her soul.
Fred. And was that all?
Ivan. Once woman tells her love,
She does not quickly end, but tells it on,

Long, Frederick, after we get the theme.
Now, wilt listen soberly?

Fred. (Yawning.) Go on.

Ivan. My lips all mute (for what were speech to empt
A heart o'ercharged as mine with gratitude?),
I sat with eyes that strain'd their might to Heav'n,
And what did she? Thank Heav'n too? Ay! but how?
With tears, with sobs, words inarticulate
Except to love's own ear, which told me plain
The ample tribute all was meant for me.

Fred. (Flippantly.) And took you not advantage of that hour?

Ivan. For what?

Fred. To dally with her.

Ivan. While the glow
Of Heaven's own hand, in mercy reach'd to save,
Was fresh upon me. And of all with her
Its warning angel that admonished me
What need I stood in of its help! No, no!
Had I,— the spirit that has pass'd in mercy
I had deserv'd to turn on me in vengeance. (Crosses.)

Fred. Didst thou not wonder, when, her story told,
She proved the serf I had resigned to thee?

Ivan. I did, and trembled, Frederick, for myself
To have my wish within my power, yet lack
Men's warrant to enjoy it righteously;
And have no other option, but foregoing it,
Or wearing it despoiled of ruth and honor.

Fred. And wherefore did she fly thee?

Ivan. Through my fault!
I dared but breathe a wish 'twas shame to harbor;
Drooping and mute the wounded girl withdrew.
I would have call'd her back, but pride prevail'd;
Reflection, back'd by love, turned pride to shame.
I vowed to make amends next time we met,
Though not to the amount her merits claim'd;
(I lack'd the courage to be true to love.)
But, fatal pause! we parted not to meet.
She fled the house that hour—with her my peace.

Fred. (Warmly.) Let her be mine again!

Ivan. Not though a kingdom
Were thine to buy her with, and I in bondage.
I would consume with thraldom day by day
'Ere see that treasure in another's hoarding.

Fred. Such hoarding, whether seen by thee or not,
Is sure to come. Heaven sends its gifts that men
Should use them. Wilt not thou, another will.

Ivan. Frederick, there's writhing in the likelihood.
What in the proof then? Madness! Find her for me;
For till she's found I cannot think or act.
Why playest thou the niggard, wayward fortune,
When nature is most lavish of her gifts? (Exeunt, R.)

SCENE II. — Set. — A wood close to Ivan's villa, in the suburbs of Moscow. — Time, after sunset. — Practicable winding path behind, descending amongst shrub-grown rocks; rustic bridge, with little rill. — Borders; cut foliage; a fallen tree, L.

ORLOFF discovered sitting on tree, with his gun by his side. — KARL, still dressed as postilion, is standing draining a hunting-flask which ORLOFF has handed him.

Orl. Nay, tell us, Karl, how fell it out, good lad?
Karl. The quarrel? Marry, anger led to it.
Orl. A not unlikely cause. Anger will lead
To a quarrel. But what led to anger, Karl?
Karl. A difference.
Orl. Ay! now you are coming to it.
What made the difference?
Karl. A difficulty.
Orl. Closer and closer. Now, the difficulty?
Karl. How to agree.
Orl. And what the question vex'd
Of the agreement, touching which the difficulty;
Which difficulty led to difference,
And so on to a quarrel?
Karl. What the question
Of agreement? None. Said I not to thee plainly,
How they could not agree. (Aside.) 'Twould never do.
To come from the town, nor show you had been there.
Orl. (Rising and crossing.) But touching what? What could they not agree on?
Karl. What could they not agree on? So! Oho!
Why, now, I understand you. You speak plain.
That's coming to the point. Whene'er you ask
A question, as you hope to get an answer,
Come to the point. So, now your answer. See
The use of coming to the point. You have Your answer.
Orl. How! This tells me nothing, Karl.
Karl. Why, nothing can I tell you.
Orl. (Aside.) What a fool
The town has made of him! We shall be quits
Before we part, though. He shall tell me that I know as well as he. (Aloud.) A strange adventure
Was that about the girl —
Karl. That saved the life
Of Daran?
Orl. How it came to pass I know not.
Karl. Why, thus it came to pass. Daran had died,
But that she saved his life.
Orl. 'Twas well for Daran.
Karl. That's as it proves; Daran may come to the knout.
Now death is death; and yet is not one death

Another death. Stabbing is not the same
As shooting. Would you say a strangled man
Was drowned? The end is one, the means are many;
And there the difference lies. What kind of death
Would you like best to die?

Orl. Like best?

Karl. Come, come!
'Tis clear there is a difference; and where
A difference is, a choice is sure to be;
And where a choice, of course a preference.
Which of these deaths would you prefer to die?

Orl. None.

Karl. You amaze me. Were I in the strait,
And had my choice, my mind would be made up
In a moment.

Orl. Which way, then, would you prefer?

Karl. Which way? Which way? I'll tell another time;
There is no hurry now. One thing is clear:
No death like the knout. Daran was near it once,
Whence sprung the brawl with Robert.

Orl. (Aside.) Now, then, comes
At last the story. I shall seem to pay
No heed to it, so shall I hear it through. (Walks up and down.)

Karl. Will you listen, Orloff?

Orl. Yes, if you make haste.

Karl. When was I slow? When did I not make haste?
Come to the point at once, when 'twas my time?

Orl. (Aside.) You take your time.

Karl. Count Ivan, as you know—

Orl. And if I know, why do you tell it me?

Karl. Must everything be new? Can naught be told
Save what is new? Take you the rarest tale
That ever wonder cried "Heaven save us!" at,
There shall be something old. Be thankful, then;
Take old and new together, or take nought.
Count Ivan, as you know, saved Daran's life.

Orl. Well, have you done?

Karl. Done? Here's a man for a story;
He does not know the end from the beginning.

Orl. Why, is there more to hear?

Karl. More? Sayst thou, more?
'Twere a fine story, which three words could tell.
A pretty kind of story.

Orl. 'Twould be sweet;
According to the adage: "short and sweet."
But to the end, for I'm in haste. (Catches gun up.)

Karl. (Taking hold of his wrist.) You'll wait
For the middle, won't you?

Orl. Yes, so you take care
Not to stick in the middle. (Replaces gun.)

Karl. Stick? Not I.
I ne'er left off in tale I once began,
While word remained to tell. Robert has planned
The death of the Count to-night. This, Daran knows,
And hence the breach. He would not have him die
Who saved him from the knout. A near escape
Had Daran, without knife, when Robert drew;
When, in the thicket crouched, up springs a youth,
And holds a sword to him! This turns the odds;
But Daran spares the man had murdered him,
And lets him go.
Orl. I know the rest. Good-by.
(Makes as if to go.)
Karl. (Stopping him.) Nay, half the tale's to tell! You'll hear the whole?
The stripling swooned soon as he gave the sword,
And —
Orl. Lay as he were dead. (Going.)
Karl. (Holding him back.) Stone dead! Whereon —
Orl. They bore him to the brook, and he revived.
(Taking another step.)
Karl. After a time — a long time — during which —
Orl. Loosening his doublet — (Still retreating.)
Karl. Yes, to give him —
Orl. Air.
Karl. They found the stripling was —
Orl. A girl!
Karl. Disguised.
Orl. (Returning, C., and resting on his gun.) Of course!
How else had she for stripling passed?
Karl. The man who mars a tale would cut a throat.
At least, should have his own cut. Thou knowest all.
Naught is thy all. Who was the girl? Tell that.
Orl. Nay, tell thou that; I know not.
Karl. Tell thyself!
When thou wouldst borrow, brag not of a purse,
Or he that's woo'd to lend may chance to mock.
Who was the girl? I know.
Orl. I care not.
Karl. Right.
Be of the fox's mind. Say, 'tis not worth
The having. Guess you why he said the grapes
Were sour? Because they hung above his reach?
No! but because he knew that the grapes were sweet
Could he but crush them!
Orl. Know I not the rest
As well as thou?
Karl. How she was chambermaid
To the inn which Robert kept?
Orl. Yea, more!
Karl. What! How

She betray'd him to Count Ivan?

Orl. More than that.

Karl. What! How the Count escaped?

Orl. More still.

Karl. And took —
Orloff, what took the Count along with him?

Orl. Thou wantest me to tell! Thou dost not know,
Thy looks betray thee! Shall I tell thee, Karl?
Why, then, he took—

Karl. The maid along with him.
I hope I know the rest of the story now.

Orl. Ay, well as I that knew not word before.
Nay, spare your choler. 'Tis my turn to-day;
It may be yours to-morrow. Hands, good Karl,
And welcome to the bandit's haunt again.
'Twas well you broke with Robert.

Karl. For my skin!
I have a conscience! It were reasonable
To run a light risk for a heavy gain.
But when the gain and risk change scales, I stop —
Because I have a conscience. Robert wants
Revenge; I don't. He cares not for his life;
I do for mine. He swears the Count shall die;
I never swear to anything except
I know 'twill come to pass, because I have
A conscience. Orloff, ever have a conscience?

Orl. The town, I see, has taught you something, Karl.
Now, wherein differ those who dwell in town
From us?

Karl. In this — they have no consciences;
But I must leave thy pleasant company,
Or make my bed with thee upon the grass,
Finding fast closed the city gates.

Orl. By fortune
You have not far to go. I wish myself
'Twere further — that for safety's sake, good Karl!
But Daran wills, and Orloff must. And hist!
By that same token here he comes.

Karl. And I
By that same token vanish. (Exit hurriedly, L.)

Orl. (Looking after him.) Knave and fool
Dispute dominion in his coward soul! (Looks behind.)
Ha! she is with him, and in earnest converse.
Perchance I'm one too many. So I go. (Exit, R.)

Enter, down winding path, the outlaw DARAN with ALEXINA dressed in male attire and leaning on him; they come down, and he seats her gently on the fallen tree.

Dar. Thy tale is strange. To love, and yet forego,
Thyself of state so lowly, his so high!

Riches and rank bow virtue of themselves;
Yet here, though back'd by love, like feathers weigh.
'Tis very strange! Thou surely art belov'd
Of Him who round and round us sends the sun
To cheer the world and no distinction makes,
But sends to king and robber share alike.
I am a rude, unletter'd man, and yet
I know what goodness is—could love it too.
Thou sav'dst my life!

Alex. It cost me nothing.

Dar. No;
But might have cost thee much, had he prevail'd,
By whom 'twas jeopardized. I say again,
And contradict me not, for I am rash,
Else had I never in such peril stood,
Thou sav'dst my life! and nothing in return
Do I for thee? (Musing.)

Alex. If I should name a thing—

Dar. Name it!

Alex. (Essaying to kneel.) Protect the life of him I love!

Dar. (Preventing her.) You know 'tis threatened then?

Alex. You know it too! My fears then warn'd me rightly.

Dar. If they did, you know he dies to-night.

Alex. O Heav'n!

Dar. Therefore to yonder villa, which beneath the walls
Of the gray city flickers like a dream,
Goes he this very night, from whom you saved me.

Alex. O sir!

Dar. Inevitable is the blow!
And when, reclined upon his couch, he waits
For sleep, he meets with death!

Alex. To-night?

Dar. To-night!

Alex. Ah me!

Dar. And though I owe
A heavy debt to him, for from the knout
He sav'd me once—

Alex. Yes, yes!

Dar. Yet must I say,
Repaying thee with evil — (for, to the act
The will is as the spirit to the body—
The life on't — without which you have a corse
That can't avail a wagging finger's worth) —
Repaying thee in such wise, naught he meets
But his deserts! I would not turn my hand
To save him.

Alex. (Rising and crossing.) I would give my hand itself
And limb on limb,—yea, everything, except
What I must render, far as in me lies,
Perfect again to Heaven.

Dar. (Half aside to himself.) She sav'd my life!

Alex. Think of thy debt to him; or what thou sayst
Thou ow'st me make huge as e'er thou wilt,
I'll throw it into his account, so that
Thou pay'st. Yea, will from thy creditor
Into thy debtor turn, who day by day
Shall weary Heav'n for blessing to repay thee.
Dar. (Aside.) How truthfully her gentle nature works!
It were the way!
Alex. O sir, the Count is good!
His generosity rebukes his love;
Which only fail'd, to wish the thing it did.
Which when he breath'd, his tongue itself condemn'd,
That flatter'd more than spoke — while glanc'd aside
His eye, ashamed to countenance the act,
And on his cheek his better nature glow'd.
Dar. (Aside.) He is the man she paints. It were the way.
Alex. And, O sir, what impediments of ruth
And reason will not love, in men, o'erleap?
And how the world o'erlooks its trespassers!
Half which, and more, lay to the world's account,
That gives its countenance against its lips!
Oh! help him, sir, or show to me the way,
And see if 'tis not taken, soon as known.
Dar. My heart inclines to save him. Let me think.
Alex. Do so! And I will lift my heart the while
To Heaven to guide thy thoughts.
Dar. 'Tis hard
To lay one's own life for another down,
Though cherish'd ne'er so dearly.
Alex. —Yes, 'tis hard;
But those methinks I know would do as much.
Dar. Then, to be murder'd in cold blood!
Alex. 'Tis but
The thought! The thing's the same!
Dar. I spoke of him.
Alex. The Count — O Heav'n! my blood is all congeal'd.
Dar. One chance alone is left him! Could we find
One that would take his place —
Alex. What! sleep alone
To-night in his bed?
Dar. And there abide the blow
That's meant for him. For there must be a victim:
Blood must be shed, that safety be procured!
To balk the assassin with an empty couch
Were but to place the date of Ivan's death
Beneath another moon. (Pause.) But how contrive it!
Alex. That's
The thing. The rest is nothing.
Dar. Nothing! What,
Nothing to find a friend to die for us?
Alex. Find thou the way, and I shall find the friend.

Dar. Behoves his object be concealed.
Alex. Of course —
The Count of his own life would make a wreck,
Ere friends he loves should founder for its sake.
Dar. Nay, for this cause besides, I were foresworn;
If through my measures warning reach'd the Count
Or any of his household; yet behoves
That he who saves him see him.
Alex. See him! What! —
And be discover'd?
Dar. Not were he disguised.
Alex. (Recollecting her own disguise.)
(Aside.) Good! Good! Now, fortune, makest thou amends
For all bad turns gone by. (Aloud.) But, at a word,
The well-known voice betrays. Ah! there again
Is danger.
Dar. Yes; but not if he were mute,
As he were deaf and dumb.
Alex. I see the way.
I bear a letter from you to the Count,
In which — but more of this anon — you hint
That what in love he seeketh he shall find:
That here by leafy margent of the wood
You wait his instant coming. Without doubt
He'll come all eagerly; and in his haste
Forget the humble messenger.
Dar. And then?
Alex. Oh, trust me! Ne'er was labyrinth yet
Too intricate for woman so the core
But held the thing she loved. How then can I,
Loving as I do, chance to fail in quest
Of that sweet death that seals my love for him?
Ah! all's before me; I shall set it down,
And you, anon, shall sign what I indite.
Canst write?
Dar. Why, yes; the Count well knows my hand.
Alex. He knows your hand? All's right, — all's clear, all's done.
(Takes out tablets, kneels before the tree and writes.)
Dar. (Aside.) Oh, earnest love! Oh, most ingenious love!
Quick'ning her wits to save her lover's life
By shipwreck of her own. — Oh, truthful maid!
The purpose snatching up before me, which
I all along kept eye on, and pursued.
And, if thou run'st thy bark upon this beach,
Thou'lt find a haven where thou seest a grave.
Alex. (Rising, and reading from paper.) Here it is.
"I have tidings for thee, — of the maid who flies,
Who shuns thy suit, and yet would give thee all.
An arrow's flight beyond thy garden rim

I wait thee in the precincts of the forest.
Naught knows my messenger, — question him not;
He's deaf and dumb. Nor tarry to conjecture,
But on the instant come!"

Dar. 'Tis well.

Alex. Now sign,
And let me quick begone. To-night, you said,
And lo! the night is here. Sign — quick — I pray.

(DARAN signs and gives her the letter, — she puts it in her breast. — ALEXINA is about to go when DARAN restrains her, and takes her hand. — Lights down.)

Dar. So eager, too! Prompt will falls soon to work.
Stay; let me read your hand before you go.

Alex. (Withdrawing her hand.) Nay, for my fate is told;
So fare thee well.
(Waves him adieu and exits R.)

Dar. (Looking after her.) And now for Ivan, — on his heart's your life, —
For if he's base, 'tis better you should die. (Looks L.)
Ha! footsteps! peasants, doubtless for the town.

(DARAN retires up behind, and conceals himself behind tree. — Enter, L., ROBERT, CATHERINE, and others, disguised in mantles. — They hesitate as to their path, and come down.)

Cath. Robert!

Rob. Now, wife?

Cath. Thou hast not called me "Kate,"
Since that unlucky night.

Rob. I am sour'd. 'Tis hard
To lose the game, yet hold it in our hand.
But for my love of thee, the traveller,
Booty and all were safe. go back, I say!

Cath. No! for my heart misgives. Your enterprise
Will fail.

Rob. How, Kate?

Cath. Ay, that's the word; go on.
Do what thou wilt, so still thou call'st me so.

Rob. Well, Kate, why should we fail? I know the lair
Wherein this antler crouches, know the time
To take him there, and how to cheat the wind.
And shall I lose him? No! my plan is sure.
His walls are paper; treasures they enclose.
These shall be ours, and, with them, worth them all, —
Revenge! Go back and sleep, sweet Kate, till morn
Wakes thee with tidings brighter than the sun.

Cath. I'll not go back —

Rob. Thou wilt not? Then, come on.
He baffled me before thy face, my Kate;
Made gyves for me of thy sweet looks, and laugh'd
To see me bound with my own heart-strings. Kate,
I have sworn to be revenged! Then, come along;
And, for requital, see me keep my oath.

He baffled me, — and let him baffle yet,
I tell thee I will hunt him to the death.
But now let's seek the trail again. Too nigh
Our bourn to tread the open forest path,
We'll plunge into the shrouding waste of verdure;
The velvet moss will not repeat our steps.
Nor moonbeam play the spy.

Cath. Husband, lead on.

(They exeunt cautiously, R.1E. — DARAN comes down stage and surveys them disappearing.)

Dar. So soon; so nigh? I would the Count were come.
(Retires up and looks off R.)
Ha! no shadow that of tree or rock. It moves,
'Tis he! but not alone. Yonder they glide.
Does he suspect my faith? I soon shall know.
(Retires up ascending path. — Scene closes in.)

SCENE III. — Another part of the Forest. — Lights down. — Front Cloth.

Enter, R., IVAN and FREDERICK, cloaked. — IVAN strives to read a letter by the moonlight.

Fred. And pay you trust to warrant slight as this
Signed by an outlaw?

Ivan. Ah, the desperate
Are prodigal of trust. They grasp at shadows,
Yet know they melt; though here, or I mistake,
Is that which baffles fading. Not more strange
The vanish'd maiden hereby should be found,
Than that her loss of Daran should be known.
The knowledge vouches for the remedy.
Frederick, I trust in Daran. Had you seen
His messenger, — so had you said might look
A seraph, took he on him form of earth,
To do some merciful behest of Heaven.

Fred. And Daran promises to-night to meet you here?

Ivan. Hark! is't a step?

Dar. (Without.) Ho! trav'ler, who goes there?

Fred. Who questions?

Ivan. Daran! or do I forget
His voice? Daran!

Enter DARAN, L.

Dar. My lord!

Ivan. Well; I have done
Your bidding.

Dar. You did right.

Ivan. What brings you hither?

Dar. Love for you, my lord, and only that;
The life you serv'd were misbestowed, unless

Devoted to your service when your good
Required its labors, cares, or sacrifice.
Warn'd by my spies your peace was jeopardized,
Touching the cause, by the same means informed, —
And further of the remedy advised,
I penn'd that scroll, and gave it to the boy.
But what the issue shall be know I not,
Whether it tendeth to thy joy or woe.

Ivan. (Aside to FRED.) I trust him, Frederick. He can read my heart;
Knows it without tuition of my tongue.
What think you of him?

Fred. If the eye and mind
Confess affinity, his thoughts are lit
With knowledge past what schoolmen boast to teach.

Ivan. How, Daran, mean you to my joy or woe?

Dar. Woe if you wrong her, — woe if you forego her.

Ivan. How for my weal?

Dar. Possess her lawfully;
But there your pride demurs.

Ivan. You hear him, Frederick;
Reads he my heart?

Dar. If birth expects her sons
To look so high, pity not make them, too,
Callous of what's below them; howsoe'er
With beauty, virtue, flourishing, although
No sap it draws from her.

Ivan. Frederick, there's learning,
And lofty, too, without the aid of books.
Daran, say on.

Dar. My lord, I am confounded
(No wonder, an unread, untutor'd wight)
With pondering the ways of social men.
Goodness, they say, is all that Heaven regards;
Do they not? They are worshippers of Heav'n;
Are they not? They should love, then, what Heav'n loves;
And rate what Heav'n does highest; do they so?
A puzzle this, to savage men like me,
Who dwell in woods and wilds.

Ivan. What mean'st thou, Daran?

Dar. Nothing, my lord. What boots it what a rude,
Unlettered man can say, who ne'er conn'd book,
Except that common one, which all men ope',
By nature written — plain to mother-wit?
Indeed, indeed, my lord, a precious thing
To find is love in man or woman.

Ivan. Yes.

Dar. It lasts, my lord, when all beside goes by;
It will work miracles. Life, after all,
Is man's especial good. Through what a rough,

And tedious road he'll drag it. To keep hold,
What will he not let go! It is the chain
That binds him to the fainting galley bench;
And yet he would not snap it. 'Tis the winch
That moves the rack, yet would he have it turn.
But love will giv't away — not risk it — that
Were nothing. Give it! Take it to the brink
Of a precipice, and over with't; or run it
Right on a rapier's point, — nor in the heat
Of doing, but in cool blood, — a document
For glory, panting in the hosted field,
And giving odds to death. Such love, methinks,
Were worth a king's fee; but the question is,
Hath a king realms to buy it? Such the love
Borne towards you by the maiden you renounce,
Who seeks, for you, a grave, yet flies your bed.

Ivan. Who seeks for me a grave, yet flies my bed?
How then, to-morrow, give her to me?

Dar. The parable is true, — as I have said,
The end is woe or weal, — which, rests with you.

Ivan. Daran, be plain with him who trusts in thee;
How woe?

Dar. To find a corse in her you love.

Ivan. How weal?

Dar. To lead her to thy nuptial bed.
A funeral, or bridal, waits for thee;
The maid, a bride or corse — the option thine —
A mourner or a bridegroom. Now to choose.

Ivan. Daran, thou sport'st with me.

Dar. (Kneeling.) Is this to jest?
My lord, wilt save the maid thou lov'st from death?
Wilt waive the pride of birth to save her life,
This very hour in jeopardy for thine?

Ivan. In jeopardy for mine?

Dar. (Rising.) Thou art betray'd;
Made o'er a bargain to the assassin's knife.
One only way to save thee was descried, —
A desperate one; to find a substitute
Would undergo the fate intended thee.
(Comes close to IVAN.)
That substitute is found.

Ivan. In whom?

Dar. The maid,
Who once before preserv'd your life, — if true
The tale she told, — at peril of her own.

Ivan. Most true the tale.

Dar. Whose cherishing of thee
Cost her — what beggars life, if thrown away —
Her virgin love. Whose love, as she affirmed,
You paid her back (I speak her very words)
With all the glow, but not the holiness.

Ivan. Alas! most true.
Dar. She fled from you —
Ivan. She did!
Dar. To roam the world! far drearier (she said)
To her than waste where never tree strikes root,
Where never herbage shoots, nor water springs.
Ivan. Oh, gem, despised because 'twas poorly set,
Fit for a monarch's crown!
Dar. By chance we met.
A lucky chance for me! — but what for her?
An unexpected friend draws out the heart;
She told me all her story; in return,
The plight you stand in I reveal'd to her.
(Rapidly.) And now — e'en while I tell it you — the blow
That's meant for you her spotless breast awaits!
Ivan. How? Where? You speak in riddles. Here am I —
Where is the blow? I cannot see it!
Dar. No!
But she will feel it — else on me and mine
A curse alight — unless you snatch her from it.
Ivan. How can I snatch her from it? How?
Dar. Unless
The life you save you render worth the care,
What use to her to live?
Ivan. (Drawing.) Slave, to the point!
Or thou shalt die!
Dar. (Folding his arms.) Then, surely, she is dead!
My life, my lord, is yours, of right to take,
Seeing you sav'd it once.
Ivan. — Daran, speak out!
Ere I would slay thee I would slay myself.
Thy life — my own — the lives of all I love,
I hold as naught to save that maiden's life.
Dar. Then save it, sir!
Ivan. The way?
Dar. There is but one!
But one, by all my hopes! — and I have hopes
More dear to me than the next breath I draw.
One only way. To plight thy troth to hers!
Ivan. I'll do it!
Fred. Ivan!
Ivan. Yea, though all the world
Said "No!" I'll do it.
Dar. Are you bound to this!
Ivan. Ay, by my honor — by my honor — all
I reverence — else, the liar's, coward's brand
Stick to me hence — forever.
Dar. (Wildly.) Then to work!
And would you save her, lose not moment more!
I swear she is in danger, whilst I talked
The precious time was fleeting, and to save

Her heart, I fear I've slain her body! Come!
Ere now the cursed bloodhound's at her throat.
Ivan. O Heva'n protect her!
Dar. Follow me!
Ivan. }
Fred. } Lead on!

(Exeunt hurriedly, R.)

SCENE IV.—Bedroom (set) in the house of IVAN.—Time, midnight.—At back, practicable window opening to the ground, through it is seen the distant city, and over it the moon.— Practicable door R. L. U. E.—A couch with canopy.— The couch is spread with furs and skins.— The usual paraphernalia of a bed room scattered about.— Coffers on table.— Lights down.

ALEXINA, is discovered sitting in thought on a fauteuil.

Alex. (Rising.) At last the moment comes! The fate's severe.
Loving and lov'd — and then so soon to die!
But love is the condition of my death.
I am content! He knew me not again,
Nor pierced the secret of this poor disguise;
But flushed all eager for the tale should bring Him back to her — the lost one — who yet stood
Within the beating of his amorous heart.
I am content. For in his glad confusion,
Beckoning his friend, and straining to be gone,
He marked me not — beyond one passing glance; —
And so, to glide through corridor and hall,
To try this room and that, and at the last
To attain to this, my tomb, was easy task.
(She walks towards couch.)
This couch last night in sleep my lover prest,
And woke at dawn; the sleep I seek 's eternal.
But still the dread, yet pitying Pow'r that gave
My breath to me, I dare not — do not mock;
One love is mine on earth, one trust in Heav'n.
I live in him — my own poor life is naught.
(She gazes on the moon and stars.)
Farewell, sweet world, with all thy myriad charms!
Farewell, O moon and stars! Sad, wistful thoughts
Will thrill the heart that parts from youth and life.
(She turns again towards the couch.)
Then welcome, death! grim friend, but still a friend,
Who makes no promise not to be fulfilled.
All misery ends with thy sharp, brief pang;
Thou break'st with endless morn our dreamless sleep.
(Shrinks from the couch with horror.)
Yet freezing is his aspect — deep his frown;
His clasp too dread for mortal thoughts to bear;
My soul recoils — life's arms are round me thrown;
Away! Such dalliance is not for me.

(She unclasps her collar and prepares to lie down on couch.)
O spirits, ministers of Heav'n's high will,
Be near to aid me in this awful hour!
(She rests on the couch previous to lying down.)
My fears are past; and now for sleep serene!
The death in life — the life in death. (Pause.) Farewell!
(She reclines on couch.—Pause.—ROBERT and CATHERINE appear behind at window cloaked. — CATHERINE bears dark lantern and ROBERT a poignard.— They enter softly by window, and grope down stage.)
Rob. Hush, wife! tread lightly as the summer air
When the aspen leaf is still! Unveil the light
Slow as a dubious dawn.
(She withdraws the shade a little.)
Is this his room?
Look for the signs!
Cath. (Turning light on wall.) That is his portrait sure,
And these his coffers. (Touches them.)
Rob. (Clutching at them.) Ha! I know them well
And the bed — (He discovers it) — 'tis he!
Cath. (Approaching.) He sleeps —
Rob. (Feeling his dagger.) Ay! ne'er to wake.
(Distant bells chime the hour.— ROBERT, who has approached the bed, starts back.)
Rob. Stay! Hist!
Cath. What now? Art terrified?
Rob. No — no!
But heard you naught?
Cath. A distant bell —that's all.
Rob. One moment — something seems to hold my hand —
Cath. Remember! Coward!
Rob. I do, and so away
With scruple! He but dreams he hates his foe
Who hesitates to kill! I'll do it now!
(ROBERT approaches his victim.— He hesitates.— At last lifts his knife to strike, when the door R. is burst open and enter IVAN, DARAN, and FREDERICK.— CATHERINE shrieks.— IVAN thrusts at ROBERT, who has turned in terror from the couch.—He falls.— ALEXINA springs from bed, and clasping her arms around IVAN, C., falls on his breast.)
Alex. (In broken utterances.) Saved! Doubly saved!
Ivan. My love — my love!
Dar. (Going towards window, and stretching his right arm solemnly towards IVAN.)
Thy oath
Remember!
(Long pause.— IVAN mutely attests his faith.)
She was true — TRUE UNTO DEATH!

(Tableau.— C. IVAN and ALEXINA.—In front of them lies ROBERT, with CATHERINE kneeling beside him.— L. FREDERICK.— Behind, with his hand still raised and half turned to go, DARAN.

A NEW DRAMA.

A FISHERMAN'S LUCK.

A COMEDY DRAMA IN FOUR ACTS.

By W. P. GETCHELL.

Six male and four female characters. Scenery, chiefly interiors; very easy. One quick change from interior to exterior of a lighthouse may be made elaborate if desired. This is a stirring drama of modern life and character. The scene is laid on the coast of Maine, and the characters are rustic and nautical. The fortunes of Tom Manly and Rose Prescott will command the warmest sympathy; and Uncle Davie and the stage-struck Silas will evoke an easy laugh. In professional hands this piece has been a big success.

Price... .....25 Cents.

SYNOPSIS.

ACT I. — Tom Manly's Home on the Coast of Maine. "Home Sweet Home." A Villain's Scheme. Father and Son. "For the Land's Sake, who's that Man Bringin' Here?" Rose Prescott's Return. A Stage-struck Rustic. "I 'dough' know." "Ah, Mother, Home Again!" Tom's Surprise. Hammond's Vow. "She Shall be Mine!" The Lottery Ticket. Uncle Davie Tells His Story. Si in a Box. A Fisherman's Love. "Darn it, it's Something You've Got to Get Used to!" A Villain's Proposal. The Old Home Threatened. The Lucky Number. "There Stands the Criminal; I Bought that Ticket of Him."

ACT II. — SCENE 1. Interior of High Point Lighthouse. Si and Ruth at Love-making. Uncle Davie Interrupts. Tom's Fortune. Too Late to Save the Old Home. A Wild Night. Nellie's Appeal. "Don't Go, Tom!" The Plot Thickens. The Robbery. SCENE 2. Exterior of Lighthouse. Into the Waves. "My God, it's Nellie!" Saved!

ACT III. — SCENE 1. Hammond's Home. The Forged Letter. James Renews his Proposal. "I'd Rather Die than Marry You!" SCENE 2. Tom's Home in Boston. James's Visit. A Message of Love. Si's Letter. Ruth indignant. "Si, Come Right Here to Your Mother." SCENE 3. A Child's Vision. Death of Little Nellie. "O God, Thy Will be Done!"

ACT IV. — Rose's Home in Maine. Tom's Disclosure. Uncle Davie's Joy. "There's Something Wrong Here." Marriage Bells. The Accusation. "My God, the Fool has Found Me Out!" "Hug Him, Ruth, He Deserves It." A Wedding Interrupted. "That Girl is my Daughter!" A Villain Foiled. "We're going to have a Wedding here yet!" A Fisherman's Luck.

AN UNEXPECTED LEGACY.

A COMEDIETTA IN ONE ACT.

By EGBERT W. FOWLER.

One male and two female characters. Scenery and costumes very easy. A most amusing misunderstanding between two old sweethearts, ending very happily. Very crisp and bright.

Price.....15 Cents.

A NEW IRISH DRAMA.

CAPTAIN JACK;

OR,

THE IRISH OUTLAW.

A PATRIOTIC IRISH DRAMA IN THREE ACTS.

By BERNARD F. MOORE.

Seven male and four female characters. Costumes, Irish, 1867, military and picturesque; scenery, an interior and an exterior. The story of this piece turns upon the always popular motive of Ireland's struggle for political freedom, and is full of patriotic sympathy, besides being ingeniously constructed and cleverly developed. Its list of characters is very strong, both in its heroic and humorous elements. John Driscoll, the hero, provides plenty of excitement, and his faithful follower, Barney Donovan, an abundance of characteristic Irish fun. Aline, the heroine, and Captain Gordon are capital parts, and Squire Shannon and Teddy Burke, the heavy characters, are particularly strong. This is a second "Shamrock and Rose."

Price.....25 Cents.

SYNOPSIS.

ACT I.—The home of the Driscolls. The girl I left behind me. Aline and the Captain. A forged kiss. Barney's blarney. The devil and his shadow. Captain Jack. A warning. Old friends. The Squire's proposal. "I have sworn to make you my wife by fair means or foul." A cowardly blow. THE ARREST.

ACT II.—The Squire's study. The cat's paw. A rose from a thorn. Nellie plans a rescue. The ex-Captain. A plea for mercy. Aline's resolve. "Not even for his sake." In the Squire's power. Rescued. Barney bobs up again. Teddy brings bad news. The hunted outlaw. THE ESCAPE.

ACT III.—At the Driscolls'. Kate and Barney. A little tiff. Kate Kelly's kiss. Aline and the Captain. A light ahead. Hunters and hunted. An undutiful daughter. Captured. A rift in the clouds. THE PARDON.

A CYCLONE FOR A CENT.

A FARCE IN ONE ACT.

By PAULINE PHELPS.

Three male and three female characters. Scene, a plain interior; costumes, modern and everyday. Adelaide Merwin's fad of "originality" is the cause of a sad domestic muddle, to which Colonel William Selton, the inventor of bottled cyclones and other condensed weather, ably contributes. Very funny.

Price.....15 Cents.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SHAMROCK AND ROSE."

A BIT O' BLARNEY.

AN IRISH PLAY OF THE PRESENT TIME IN THREE ACTS.

By FITZGERALD MURPHY.

AUTHOR OF "SHAMROCK AND ROSE," "THE IRISH STATESMAN," ETC.

As originally performed at the Park Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., April 10, 189

Nine male and two female characters. Modern costumes. Scenery, an ex terior and two interiors, not difficult. Time in playing, two hours and a hal This is an entirely new and original drama of Irish life. Its plot is unconv tional and stirring, its interest is absorbing, its incident fresh and abundant a its dialogue replete with true Irish wit, humor, sentiment and poetry. Rod the Rover, originally played by the author, is a near relation of Boucicault "Conn" and "Shaun." Mr. Lawton, the American lawyer, is a capital part Cuddeen Cassidy, Corkerry, Darby Darney and Shevaun are excellent character bits. This is a very strong piece alike in plot and character, and acts itself.

Price . . . . . 25 Cents.

SYNOPSIS:

ACT I. Glen Blarney by moonlight. Old-fashioned love-making. The arriva of the American. The rescue. The first chapter in an international romance A story of California. Rody and the leprehaun. The story of Rosaleen. Th black bird and the dove. The blow. Love under the furze-blossoms. Th trust. The robbery and the murder. THE ACCUSATION.

ACT II. Shevaun's shebeen at sunset. The May-day festivities. The Queen o the May. Cuddeen Cassidy falls into the wrong company. The old, ol story. Lord and peasant. The proposal. The story of the murder. Arriva of the police. The parting. THE ARREST.

ACT III. Blarney Manor. "The darkest hour before the dawn." A Californi game of bluff. The murderer and the ghost. The widow's predicament The conspirators. THE BIT O' BLARNEY. Rosaleen's peril. The attempte assassination. The tables turned. SQUIRE RODY.

FOR FEMALE CHARACTERS ONLY.

THE GOVERNESS.

A COMEDY IN ONE ACT.

FOR FEMALE CHARACTERS.

Three characters, two of which impersonate two others as well. Scenery a simple interior. Costumes of the last century, but may be modern, if desire An admirable piece for two clever girls, good at disguises, providing a bright snappy entertainment for school or hall.

Price . . . . . 15 Cents.

BAKER'S SELECTED LIST OF JUVENILE OPERETTAS

esigned especially for Church, School, and other Amateur Organizations. Complete, with all the music and full directions for performance.

---

randpa's Birthday. In One Act. Words by DEXTER SMITH; music by C. A. WHITE. For one adult (male or female) and three children; chorus, if desired. PRICE, 25 CENTS.

mmy, The Newsboy. In One Act. Written and composed by W. C. PARKER. For one adult (male), and one boy. No chorus. Very easy and tuneful. PRICE, 25 CENTS.

he Four-leafed Clover. In Three Acts. By MARY B. HORNE. For children of from six to fifteen years. Seven boys, seven girls, and chorus. Very picturesque. PRICE, 50 CENTS.

eans and Buttons. In One Act. Words by WM. H. LEFEBRE; music by ALFRED G. ROBYN. Two male and two female characters; no chorus. Very comical and easy. PRICE, 50 CENTS.

unt the Thimble. In One Act. Words by A. G. LEWIS; music by LEO R. LEWIS. Two male, two female characters and small chorus. Simple and pretty. PRICE, 50 CENTS.

ed Riding Hood's Rescue. In Four Scenes. Words by J. E. ESTABROOK; music by J. ASTOR BROAD. Three male, four female characters and chorus. PRICE, 50 CENTS.

olden Hair and the Three Bears. In Five Scenes. By J. ASTOR BROAD. Three adults (2 m., 1 f.), eight children and chorus. Music is easy, graceful, and pleasing. PRICE, 75 CENTS.

. E. Porter; or, The Interviewer and the Fairies. In Three Acts. Words by A. G. LEWIS; music by LEO R. LEWIS. Six male, six female characters, and chorus. Very picturesque and pretty. PRICE, 75 CENTS.

yp, Junior. In Two Acts. Words by EARL MARBLE; music by D. F. HODGES. Two males, one female (adult), three children and chorus. Very successful and easily produced. PRICE, 75 CENTS.

lvin Gray; or, The Sailor's Return. In Three Acts. Written and composed by C. A. WHITE. Ten characters, including chorus; can be made more effective by employing a larger number. PRICE, 75 CENTS.

---

e's Journal describing the above and other popular entertainments sent free on application to

WALTER H. BAKER & CO.,

THEATRICAL PUBLISHERS,

No. 23 Winter Street, - Boston, Mass.

NEW OPERETTAS FOR CHILDREN.

ODD OPERAS FOR EVENTI

A Collection of Short and Simple Musical Entertainments for Children

By Mrs. C. N. BORDMAN,

Author of "The Kingdom of Mother Goose," "Musical Scenes for the R... Band," "The Temperance Clarion," etc.

Complete with all the music and full instructions for performance. This collec... strongly recommended for its simplicity, originality of idea, tunefulness and portio... teability.

Price . . . . . 50 cents.

CONTENTS.

A GLIMPSE OF THE BROWNIES. A Musical Sketch for ...dren. For any number of boys.

JIMMY CROW. A Recitation for a Little Girl.

MARKET DAY. An Operetta for Young People. Seven speaking ... and chorus.

QUEEN FLORA'S DAY DREAM. An Operetta for Children. ... speaking parts and chorus.

THE BOATING PARTY. A Musical Sketch for Little Children. ... boys and girls.

SIX LITTLE GRANDMAS. A Musical Pantomime for very ... Children. Six very little girls.

A HOUSE IN THE MOON. A Recitation for a Little Girl.

ROBIN'S SPECIFIC

OR, THE CHANGES OF A NIGHT.

A Christmas Operetta in One Act.

Words by AMELIA SANFORD. | Music by ADAM CIEBEL.

For ten adults and nine children from eight to sixteen years old; with eight very li... and twelve little girls for Chorus. Three changes of scene; very easily arranged; c... varied but simple and readily practiced. Very effective and easily gotten up.

Price . . . . . 25 cents.

Descriptive circulars describing the above and other popular entertainments sent free on applic...

WALTER H. BAKER & CO.,

THEATRICAL PUBLISHERS,

No. 23 Winter Street, - - BOSTON, MA...

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

17477.31.215
True unto death.
Widener Library
003242812
3 2044 086 780 392